Message From The Chairman

Dear Friends,

We remain very bullish on the building sales market. New York City is as highly sought after as it ever has been and the fundamentals in the market remain excellent. We have a miniscule vacancy rate in residential and very low vacancy in office buildings with relatively little speculative construction on the horizon. There remains tremendous demand from both local, domestic and international sources and we have to realize that billions of dollars of wealth have been created with the surge in building sales prices over the last six or seven years. The sub-prime lending issue has been a significant one for the economy and for the country. Lack of prudent underwriting criteria and falling prices in the national housing market have exacerbated the subprime problems and have led to uncertainty across all capital markets. This issue has not been as prevalent in New York City as it has been for the rest of the nation as the dominant form of home ownership in NYC is through owning cooperative shares. Coops have much more stringent borrowing guidelines than banks. The effect on the credit markets in general has been the major local impact on our building sales market. Given the relative weak dollar, our exports are up significantly and our imports are down. This is stimulating our economy by some estimates to the tune of about 1% growth in GDP, meaning there is nominal growth in the rest of our economy. The slowing economy has several affects on our local market primarily due to its affect on interest rates. We have to monitor the economic indicators closely including inflation and employment which are the two indicators having the most profound effect on the direction of interest rates. All indications are that the economy will continue on its sluggish pace with low GDP growth, upward pressure on unemployment and inflation in check. Interest rates and spreads are always significantly important and should always be watched. But I think an indicator that needs to be looked at very closely is employment data. For much of the past 18 months unemployment was at a cyclical low, running at about 4.5-4.6%. Over the past several months it has been inching up and is currently at 4.7%. As jobless benefit claims rise it will exacerbate the reduction in consumer confidence and consumer spending. If unemployment rises and layoffs continue to pick up, spending and confidence will continue to be reduced, the foreclosure rate will increase and office space needs will be reduced. We will be keeping a close eye on the employment data. I believe that the continued malaise in the national economy will keep downward pressure on interest rates, which should keep debt flowing into our markets. We are looking forward to a solid year in 2008.

“LET THE SELLER BEWARE”

By Lynne Davis, Astoria Broker, Queens Office

It's interesting to note that developers are buying properties in Astoria to take advantage of its zoning, which allows for additional buildable square footage. Looking at sales in Astoria can be misleading until you begin to understand the modus operandi of the buyer.

Examples of knock-downs of what once were family homes are quite common in the New York metro area. I have a friend who grew up in Lido Beach, NY on one of those blocks on the ocean. The buyers kept the pool, demolished the house and built a New England style house that overshadowed all the others on the block. And just the other day, I spoke to a man who lived in a building on 21st Street in Astoria that I'm marketing as a development site. The intent is to demolish and build an 8,000 square foot residential building in its place. Fond memories of the past are still held close to many people's hearts while progress makes its way toward building new memories.

In an interesting reversal, a 1901 two-family brick house on 29th Avenue sold in February 2007 for $540,000 at approximately $228 per foot. In what was most likely a foreclosure in November 2006, the referee sold it to a Long Island company for $502,661. Back in April of 2006, the deed had been transferred for $600,000. It is located on a 25' x 100' lot in an R6B zone, which allows a floor to area ratio of 2. This means you can potentially build a 5,000 square foot building on this piece of land. If you do the math, the property sold for $108 per buildable square foot. On 30th Avenue, an irregularly shaped vacant lot sold in February 2007 for $430,000. The land area is slightly under 5,000 square feet. The floor to area ratio in this R6A district is 3. That comes to less than $30 per buildable square foot – which seems like a bargain. This got me thinking about the sales trends in Astoria, so I started looking at a number of buildings that seem to be trading on the high end of what would be “the market.”

On 38th Street, two 1,400 square foot one-family homes dating back to the early 1900's have been demolished to make way for new housing. One house with a garage built in 1914 traded in October 2006 for $1,325,000. The prior sales price for this home, recorded in 1987, was $250,000. The other house sold for $1,300,000 in January 2007. On average, that's over $900 a square foot for each building. According to the Department of Buildings, one lot has plans for a four-story building with 12 units, the other has plans for 10 units. I also came across another anomaly - a 1,200 square foot semi-detached one family on a 2,550 square foot lot that has traded four times since 2004. The first transfer was at $283,500 in 2004; in 2005 it sold for $401,700; it was sold again in 2006 for $520,000; and this year it sold for $810,000. How did the value almost triple in less than four years?

Looking through these sales, a pattern started to emerge.

Developers were buying land for what could potentially be built on the property. There are many examples of this in Astoria, such as the duplex homes on 21st Street being demolished to make way for new condominium housing. Also driving up the prices paid are incentives in some zones that encourage the development of “community facility,” which allows for additional square footage to be added to the project. The Department of City Planning allows for certain use regulations permitted in residential, commercial and manufacturing districts. So for example, when it comes to a site in an R6 zone where you could build a 40,000 square foot condominium building, you could potentially add more than 10,000 square feet of medical offices.

In Commercial Overlay Districts (example C1 and C2 overlays), retail use can be combined with the residential zoning. In this example, a beauty parlor or grocery store can be on the ground floor, below the residential use, with rental apartments up above.

Somany people want to keep the neighborhood as it is. They want to appreciate its history. But there are always those who oppose this. More moderately priced housing (compared to Manhattan) and better retail corridors are fueling this development. Other factors stimulating development include our aging population with demands for different types of housing. For most people their home is their largest real estate asset.

Bottom line – if you own an older home, say built in the early 1900's, on a piece of property that is 25' x 100' or larger with favorable zoning (such as R6 or R7X), it might be worth more than you think. Are you living on one of these properties, sitting on what could be a fortune?

To paraphrase a latin proverb – let the seller beware.
